Leader Says Sternists Would Oppose Jewish Authority Under Partition

Nathan Friedman Yellin, leader of the extremist Stern group in Palestine, talked in Tel Aviv with Clifton Daniel, of the New York Times, for more than two hours at a secret meeting in the home of a member of the Stern group, also known as Fighters for the Freedom of Israel.

The initiative in arranging the interview was taken by the Stern group, and with hush-hush precautions I was taken to an isolated house, says the writer. I noticed my escort was carrying an automatic pistol. He ushered me into a small living room, where I was left alone. In a few minutes a burly man walked in briskly. He did not introduce himself, and his name was not mentioned by anyone.

He was better groomed and more prosperous-looking than the Yellin looked in the "wanted" posters plastered all over Palestine, but he was recognizable to me, even if he had not been to the Palestine policeman who had him in his grasp.

The underground leader confirmed that he had actually been "screened" by the police last year during a four-day curfew and search for terrorists in Tel Aviv. The policeman looked at a portfolio of pictures of wanted men and then at Yellin and released him, according to the underground chief.

Yellin is an engineer by training and was editor of a daily paper published in Warsaw by Ignaz Zvai Leumi, terrorist band, before war came to Palestine in January, 1941. He immediately joined the Stern group, which had split from Ignaz Zvai Leumi. He has not been heard since Nov. 1, 1944, when he was last seen by the police.

Yellin, who is now a problem of power politics, and we know that here are now two groups of nations," Yellin said, choosing his words painstakingly.

"One, to which Britain belongs, is against us. Therefore we are obliged to take a stand against the policy of this group of nations. We believe that the nations which are represented by the eastern European countries have a predisposition to take a stand in favor of the Jewish case.

"We are very sorry to see relations between the two parties deteriorating. We know that the mid-East may become a battlefield and we don't want it to happen. Therefore we are against the establishment of military bases in Palestine and in the mid-East. We fear that a third World War will annihilate all which has been built up in this country. We want the danger of war to be averted, and therefore we have sympathies with all governments, movements or trends in world policy which are oriented on peace and not on war."

Pausing for questions, the Stern chief said that he was reluctantly obliged to conclude that recent policy placed the United States in the British group of nations on the Palestine question. "We fear that oil companies are dictating American policy toward the mid-East," he said.

He expressed opposition to the Marshall Plan, "because it wants to build up again German industry," and asserted that the Truman Doctrine "isn't a peace-making factor."

The countries of the Eastern bloc, Yellin declared, are accustomed to dealing with national aspirations "on a basis of national independence" and are "interested that the mid-East should not be converted into a military base against them."

Repeating that the Stern group's foreign policy was "oriented on the peace-loving factors in the world," he said, "we think the Eastern bloc as a whole can be defined as."

"We are fighting not for ourselves and not for a small group of people; we are fighting for the nation as a whole, and the nation is made up in great part of the working classes. For them we are fighting."

"On the other hand, Palestine is a small country and it is not a very rich country. Therefore, the economic life of the Jewish state, when it will be established, must be organized according to an economic plan. There cannot be unrestricted laissez faire. If you call it a Socialist plan, it may be so."

He added, however, that socialism was not an immediate issue.

Belgian Boy Was Saved By Monastery

A sixteen-year-old Belgian Jew who was hidden during German occupation of Belgium in a Roman Catholic monastery at Namur arrived in New York aboard the Marine Falcon to begin a new life in the Memphis, Tenn., home of Abe D. Waldauer, Collector of Customs for Tennessee and Arkansas.

The youth, George Zwirz, of Brussels, is the only child of a Polish-born father and a German-born mother and was interviewed in 1944 by Representative Clifford Davis, Democrat, of Tennessee, who was in Belgium in that year as a member of a subcommittee of the House Military Affairs Committee.

It was through Representative Davis that Mr. Waldauer heard the story of George and, thinking him orphaned by the war, wrote the Belgian authorities he wanted to make a Tennesseean of him. He learned that George's father had been killed in a concentration camp and his mother also had evaded the Nazis, that neither could enter the United States immediately but that the boy could leave Belgium under its immigration quota. His parents let him go.

Mr. Waldauer met the Marine Falcon down the bay aboard a United States Coast Guard cutter and recognized his young guest on the deck of the incoming vessel from a photograph George sent to Tennessee on his sixteenth birthday. The government official and the boy embraced warmly when they met on the deck, and Mr. Waldauer said George would be educated and cared for by him until his parents might be able to come to the United States. Mr. Waldauer has a son, Joseph, twenty, who is a student at Swarthmore College, at Swarthmore, Pa., and a daughter, Mary Alice, seventeen, who will enter college this fall.

Locker Charges British Wish To Persecute

Beri Locker, a member of the Jewish Agency executive committee, charged that "vengeance and persecution" were motives of the British in moving 4,500 Jewish refugees aboard three British ships off Port de Boue, France, since July 29. He said he had emphatically refused the Government's invitation to visit the ships to persuade the refugees, who had been seized with the capture of the Exodus 1941, to disembark in France.

Rejecting the Government's invitation to send a Jewish Agency official to the ships to arrange the voluntary disembarkation in France, Mr. Locker wrote:

"The Agency has a duty to co-operate with the mandatory power in facilitating Jewish immigration into Palestine . . . and will never lend itself to an attempt to prevent Jews from entering their national home."

The Foreign Office statement said that France had offered the passengers hospitality but that "under the influence of persistent Zionist threats and propaganda," only about 130 of them had accepted the offer.

The long official announcement restated the British stand on the present immigration quota of 1,500 a month in view of the "frequent misrepresentations of British policy in this matter." Not only for the maintenance of law and order, but also for "ensuring that nothing is done to prejudice the eventual (Continued on Page Ten)

U.N. Committee Recommendations For Two Free Palestine States And Termination Of Mandate To Be Voted On September 16

The United Nations Special Committee on Palestine recommended in a majority report that Palestine be carved into two states — one Arab and one Jewish — to become fully independent on Sept. 1, 1948, on condition they sign agreement for an economic union.

The U.N. committee, whose summary report arrived at Lake Success, N.Y., on August 31, from Geneva, also recommended admission of 150,000 Jews into the Jewish part of Palestine during the interim period of the next two years, says John G. Rogers, who summarized the report for the New York Herald Tribune. After that immigration into the Jewish state presumably would be limited only by the absorptive capacity of the land.

Under the majority report, which was signed by seven of the eleven members of the committee, the historic and holy City of Jerusalem would become a U.N. trusteeship administered by a governor (a non-Palestinian) appointed by the U.N. The Jerusalem trusteeship would take in the city's environs, including Bethlehem.

The U.N. committee, which has been at work on the tough Palestine problem for seventy-seven days and whose deadline for reporting to the U.N. membership was September 1, also recommended that during the two-year transition period Great Britain continue to administer Palestine for the U.N.

The report specified, however, that one or more U.N. members might enter into the interim administration of Palestine. Since the British are on record in advance as refusing to spend unlimited British pounds or lives in supporting a U.N. Palestine decision, it would not be surprising if they ask for help, possibly from the United States.

The recommendations of the U.N. committee, including also a minority report signed by India, Iran and Yugoslavia, will have no effect until and unless they are approved by a two-thirds vote of the full fifty-five-nation U.N. General Assembly, which convenes in Flushing Meadow Park, Queens, on Sept. 16.

In that session a harsh controversy is certain. Reports from Geneva said that Arab observers were bitter over the committee's recommendation for partition. Palestine Arabs and the Arab members of the U.N. will fight the plan to their utmost in the General Assembly and, if they are consistent with past arguments, will contend that a Jewish foothold in the Middle East will automatically make a Jewish-Arab battleground of Palestine.

In New York, Abdul Rahman Azzam Pasha, secretary general of the seven-country Arab League and one of the more moderate Arabs, assailed the report as "absolutely impracticable."

"I do not think the Assembly will take it," he said. "It does not solve anything. It only makes the situation worse."

While there was no comment to be had from the Jewish Agency for Palestine, those of its officials already resigned to partition probably will be fairly well pleased by the committee recommendations.

The Jews had asked for all of Galilee and also Jewish Jerusalem. Under the committee recommendations, they would get only eastern Galilee and, of course, none of Jerusalem. However, the committee proposed that the Jews should receive all of the Negev, the big unpeopled desert that covers almost a third of Palestine in the south, and on which the Jews have been banking as a future home for several hundred thousand Jewish immigrants.

Also, the committee recommendations would give the Jews the bulk of the Mediterranean coast, a ninety-five-mile frontage from Acre to Jeddah, including all Jewish Tel Aviv, the main port of Haifa, and the City of Jaffa.

The present legal immigration rate into Palestine is only 18,000 Jews a year and the committee report proposes immigration at the rate of 75,000 a year for the two-year transition period. Should transition run longer than two years, it proposes an immigration rate of 80,000 a year until independence is achieved, after which the Jews could presumably bring in as many as they could support. During the transition period, the Jewish Agency would be in complete charge of immigration.

The report also recommends that restrictions placed on the Jews by the British seven years ago, forbidding them to buy land in all but six per cent of Palestine, shall be immediately lifted in the Jewish area. This would free the Jews to pay the big land prices demanded by the Arab land owners, if the Arabs would sell. Lately Palestinian Arabs have been organizing land banks for the express purpose of refusing or influencing any Arab land owner pondering sale of acreage to a Jew.

Despite what disappointments it may contain for the Jews, the majority recommendations would give them more than many Jews had dared to hope for. Then, too, since most of the United Nations members appear determined to do something about Palestine this year, the Jews can see in the committee recommendations a hope at long last that they can get on with their ambitious Palestine plans, even though their one-time dream of a Jewish state in all Palestine is dead.

The majority report of the U.N. committee, signed by Canada, Sweden, Peru, Guatemala, Uruguay, Czechoslovakia and the Netherlands, insisted upon an economic union between the Jewish and Arab states in Palestine on the basis of the fairly general belief that while Palestine can be split politically, it is too small to be split economically and survive.

Thus, the economic union would seek to promote a customs union, common currency, operation in the common interest of railways, interstate highways, postal and telegraph and telephone services, and the Ports of Haifa and Jaffa. It also would promote joint economic development, especially with regard to irrigation, land reclamation and soil conservation.

In pursuit of those objectives, the committee report calls for a nine-member economic board to consist of three Jews, three Arabs and three foreigners appointed by the U.N. Economic and Social Council.

The committee report provides that once the Jewish or Arab state has signed an agreement for the economic union, and complied with certain other formalities, its independence as a sovereign state becomes effective automatically two years from September 1, 1947.

The summary of the committee report made public at Lake Success does not explain clearly what happens if only one of the states complies. All it says is this: "If only one state fulfills these conditions, the General Assembly of the United Nations shall take such action as it may deem proper."

If the Arabs of Palestine continue to act as adamantly as they promise, it is hard to envision them agreeing to economic union with a new Jewish state. And, if the theory of the economic union and the U.N. committee is correct, the new Jewish state would be deep in a hole without an economic agreement with the Arabs.

Under the majority report, the Jewish and Arab states would consist of three separate areas each, but in each case they would be linked by intersection points so that a Jew or an Arab could travel from one to the other exteriorly of his state without entering the other state.

The Jews would get the Negev, eastern Galilee and most of the coastal plain. The Arabs would get western Galilee, the lower coastal plain, and the hill country of Samaria and Judea, with the exception of Jerusalem.

Such partition would mean a Jewish state of about 1,200,000 Arabs and about 1,200,000 Jews, about the size of Vermont-sized country.

A New Kindergarten Named After A. Reizin Is Being Founded At 4849 St. Lawrence Blvd.

At the start of the new school term, a Jewish-English kindergarten will be opened, which will serve as a start for a day school. The kindergarten will bear the name of the beloved writer, A. Reizin. Upon the request of the management to the writer, whether he would allow to have the new educational institution bear his name he replied: "Dear Chavrim, With great joy I accept your request or better, your complimenting me! I worked in my name and in the Yiddish City of Montreal, which may rightly be called the sacred community, thanks to her new and traditional 'Yiddishkeit' — it is a joy and an honor! On my part I shall try all in my power to merit this honor which you have bestowed upon my name. With friendly and Yiddish regards for the school. Yours, Aaron Reizin."

The kindergarten will be located in a nice bright room of the Workmen's Circle Building, which is now being especially renovated for this purpose. D. Friedman, who has distinguished himself with her educational work in the Jewish School in Winnipeg, has been invited to be a teacher here. A special taxi service will operate for children from outlying districts. Children, boys and girls, are being accepted. For more particulars telephone: MAquette 0550, daily, 10-12 and 4-6 p.m.

SAYS MORE RABBIS NEEDED IN GERMANY

Rabbi Joseph Asher, twenty-six-year-old rabbi of Temple Beth Israel, Melbourne, Australia, said in New York after a two-month survey of conditions in the occupied zones of Germany, that he found "most deplorable spiritual conditions and a great lack of spiritual leaders."

Rabbi Asher, who arrived at La Guardia Field, en route home from London, visited the American, British and French zones, and observed that "spiritual decay should not be permitted to continue" and urged that material reconstruction be superseded by "moral and spiritual recovery". He also advocated the sending of more rabbis to the occupied zones as soon as possible.

AGRONSKY TELLS ABOUT JOURNALISM WITH THE HEAT ON

By Richard Strauss, In The New Republic

Early in the evening of the eighth day of the martial law declared by His Majesty's High Commissioner for Palestine in Tel-Aviv last March, Daniel Agronsky, the Tel-Aviv correspondent of his father's Palestine Post, parked his little English car opposite a British compound in the southeast corner of the city known as Citrus House Fortress.

Argonsky showed his trilingual correspondent's pass to a Coldstream Guardsman at one of the few openings in the barbed-wire concertina that surrounded the compound, and was waved in. He followed a sidewalk past Citrus House itself, a crescent-shaped building that had been the headquarters of the Citrus Board until the British Army requisitioned and arabbed it and replaced machine guns on its roof, and climbed to the second floor of a building in which the British had improvised a press room, or press suite, by installing six telephones in a requisitioned three-room apartment. Four or five correspondents, including the Associated Press and Reuters men, were phoning in their stories.

Argonsky called Jerusalem, 40 miles away, and began reading his story of the day's developments in Tel-Aviv to a secretary in the Post's home office. He had nothing very dramatic to tell. Although the British had explained that they had imposed martial law in order to seal off and, as they put it, "winkle out" the Jewish terrorists who were supposed to be concentrated in Tel-Aviv, they had done little house-to-house searching. The terrorists, in return, had been blowing things up in almost every part of Palestine except Tel-Aviv during the eight days. Agronsky was reporting merely that limited bus and phone services had been restored when the chatter of machine guns interrupted him. He told his office that "somebody was shooting," and kept the line open.

When bullets began to smash through the windows and spend themselves against the walls, the correspondents scattered, dragging their phones after them. One lay against a wall. A second got into the bathtub. Agronsky crawled under a table. A Guardsman locked the press-suite door. For the better part of half an hour Jewish terrorists, in one of the two outbreaks of violence that occurred in Tel-Aviv during the martial law, sniped at Citrus House Fortness, while Agronsky and his colleagues, all of whom were Jewish, held phones in their laps and reported the attack.

Agronsky, a tall, sleepy-eyed young man with a swimmer's rangy, deep-chested build, is at present in the United States studying the editorial methods of American newspapers. He describes the Citrus House incident in easy-flowing American slang with an undertone that is difficult to place. (He was born in Greenwich Village, but was bundled off to Palestine when he was two and learned Hebrew, Arabic and English before he was six.) He thinks he was lucky to be in on the Citrus House shooting. "I phoned in what I heard," he says. "Usually, when you cover a violence story in Palestine, all you can get is a mangled version."

Censorship, to Agronsky, is the most irritating of the limitations that make the publication of a daily paper in Palestine — a country that is governed as well as taxed without local representation, and slashed by a rebellion and its counter-measures — a matter of diplomacy as much as of journalism. The High Commissioner has the authority to fine or suspend any paper. The Chief Censor, a bony, retired British Regular Army colonel named Harold Gray, operates under that authority. Gray appoints Jews and Arabs as his assistant or subsidiary censors, arms them with directives and assigns them to his main Censor's Office in Tel-Aviv, where all dailies except the Palestine Post are published.

The censors can rule that a story contradicts a directive, but lack the authority either to insist on seeing stories or to give final approval: even if a censor passes a story, the paper that prints it can still be punished if a representative of the government, reading the story next day, decides it was "dangerous to public security." In any case, Palestine's editors submit controversial material before printing it, and hope for the best. Till six in the evening, copy that might be censorable is sent as a matter of routine to the Censor's Office. From six to midnight, it is checked by phone. At midnight the head of the Censor's Office, a chubby little immigrant from Germany named Sief, makes the rounds of the papers to look over any late copy an editor wants to submit. Once Sief gets home, the only way to check a story is to rent him out of bed.

The High Commissioner has implied that a paper can be punished for "failing to cooperate" if it refuses to publish a government-inspired story as well as if it publishes a censorable one. Last February, Agronsky wrote in the Post that oranges were rotting on Palestine's trees because wood for crating them and ships for transporting them to citrus-hungry England had not arrived on schedule, although the British Trade Commission had contracted to supply them. The government, considering the story a slur on British efficiency, issued a communiqué denying it and rushed the denial to the Post. Not wishing to be accused of "failing to cooperate," the Post ran the denial of its own true story. (The denial probably did not highly impress the Post's readers, though, since its main argument was that crating and ships were on their way — hardly a refutation of the charge that they had not already arrived.)

Censorship proved itself conspicuously ineffective when it ordained that Palestine's editors could not mention the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem by name. The Post went on reporting the Mufti's activities, simply attributing them to "a well known Arab personality" and the Post's subscribers, alerted by experience to reading between the lines, began referring to the Mufti as "The Personality" in their private conversations.

The paper that has been able to get the truth past the censor without ever yet having been fined or suspended, was founded to offset British-Zionist friction. Fifteen years ago, Gershan Agronsky, Daniel's father and, according to his son's description, "an ardent Zionist and an ardent Socialist with an ardent desire to be an editor," persuaded a group of London Zionists to put up the money for an objective English-language paper in Palestine and appoint him its editor. The elder Agronsky, an admirer of the late William Allen White, argued that a restrained and responsible daily printed in English would be able to explain the Jewish position to the British — an assignment beyond the scope of the other Palestine papers that were printed in Hebrew and were as anti-British and factional in tone as the censorship permitted.

The result was the compact little Palestine Post, a fact-packed journal that reads like the objective and pacific Christian Science Monitor. (The Post is at present campaigning against Jewish terrorism.) Into his four pages, editor Agronsky is able to cram approximately two pages of news, two editorial columns, a cinema column, stock-market quotations, "wireless" program listings, a society and personals column and a half-page of sports angled specifically for British troops. Advertising is limited to one-third of the space, which compares favorably or unfavorably, depending on the reader's prejudice, with the 67-percent average of the Chicago Tribune. A typical recent issue includes ads for Haig Whisky, Okava ("the sturdy blade for stubborn beards"), Tamar ("the first lady of the bathroom") and Rennie's (a couple of Rennie's after your food — indigestion completely subdued).

As its writing staff, the Post has eight reporters and rewriters in Jerusalem, three full-time correspondents in Tel-Aviv, two in Haifa, and one each in New York and London. For obvious language reasons, only English and Americans are hired for editorial work. The business department is less finicky concerning language, and includes Germans, Russians, Poles, Americans, Palestinians and Spaniards. The printers are mostly Russian and Polish immigrants.

Getting the printers, and any one else who is needed, to the office on curfew nights is a special problem. When British sound-trucks roll slowly through Jerusalem blaring that a curfew has been declared and that the streets must be cleared in 30 minutes or an hour, the Post's night shift can't get to the office without their curfew passes — and they can't get to the Public Information Office to get their passes. Daniel Agronsky, whose press pass and car make him a handy man to have around in a curfew, is drafted if he happens to be in Jerusalem. Agronsky drives to the Public Information Office through empty streets in which he and British military patrols are the only moving objects, picks up the passes of all Post employees needed that night, and delivers the passes to the homes of the employees — a personalized special-delivery service that takes about two hours to accomplish.

the daily delivery of the paper, an operation complicated by Palestine's long, lean geography. The Post has contracted with a trucking cooperative to make a daily round-trip run from Jerusalem to Haifa in the north, dropping off bundles of Posts at communities in between. The newspaper's own twelve-year-old Ford makes a similar run to Jewish towns south of Jerusalem, and then continues on through Arab territory to the British army camps at Rafa, where the half-page of sports is, presumably, read first. Only one non-interchangeable curfew pass is issued to each of the vehicles. As a result, the same two drivers make the nine-hour trips six days a week. The Rafa driver was beaten up twice during the year, and the Haifa driver was by soldiers who refused to read. (Continued on Next Page)

AGRONSKY TELLS ABOUT JOURNALISM

During the martial law in Tel-Aviv, delivery of the Post became for once a British headache. The British military wanted the Post delivered as usual — both because it contained official communiqués and because its accuracy spiked rumors. But the same military refused to permit any non-military vehicles, including the Post's delivery truck, to enter Tel-Aviv. The stalemate was resolved when Agronsky, who also thought that the Post ought to reach the city, suggested a delivery technique to the British. Thereafter, at 4:30 each morning, the Post's truck, loaded with bundles of the paper, rolled up to the barbed-wire road-block the British had strung across the main road from Jerusalem to Tel-Aviv. At the same time, a British army pick-up truck scurried toward the road-block from the opposite side. A detachment of British soldiers, under general orders not to fraternize with Jews but under specific orders to get the Post into Tel-Aviv, transferred the bundles of papers from the Post's truck to theirs. The Post's Jewish driver helped when he was in the mood.

Even the elementary matter of obtaining cars to carry on Post business faces international complications. The old Ford, Agronsky's car and a new Ford station wagon that came as a gift from a friend in the United States, are the Post's only vehicles. The paper has not expanded its fleet because of the operation of the empire's dollar pool, a device in which all dollar credits of all members of the sterling bloc are pooled and rationed by England. Of the $14 million collected in the United States for Palestine last year, for example, dollar credits of only $3 million were assigned to Palestine Jews; the remaining $11 million was placed in the empire's dollar pool and the Jews were given corresponding credits in pounds. Unable to get the necessary dollar credit for an additional American car, the Post, in desperation, paid $875, or approximately $2,700, for Agronsky's little English car.

Prices in general in Palestine have increased approximately 300 percent since 1941. However, due to the Palestine Worker's Labor Federation — the single Palestine labor union that embraces all workers — the inflation has not been accompanied by a loss of consumer purchasing power. The Palestine government, in which the Jews have no voice, sets the price of goods that it rations. The PWLF in return, insists that a cost-of-living bonus be paid to all employees and adjusted monthly to the price index. Agronsky's base pay as a reporter was $21 a month; his income including his cost-of-living bonus, was $23 a month when he left Palestine, an increase that accurately reflected the rise in prices.

Agronsky and his wife sailed from Haifa to New York on an educational junket: Agronsky left school at 18 to volunteer for the British army, and thinks he can learn more about journalism from first-hand observation than from resuming his formal education. They are living in a friend's thirty-fifth Street apartment. Rummaging in a desk drawer for cigarettes, Agronsky came across

TO OBSERVE "TEN DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE"

The "Ten Days of Remembrance" to be observed by American Jewry during the High Holy Days on behalf of the $170,000 United Jewish Appeal for Refugees, Overseas Needs and Palestine was endorsed by the Synagogue Council of America, representing more than 2,400 Orthodox, Conservative and Reform Rabbis, though its president, Rabbi William F. Rosenblum, joined by Rabbi Ahron Opher.

Europe's 250,000 Jewish displaced persons have suffered a sharp reversal in their living conditions as a result of drastically curtailed intergovernmental assistance; 16,000 Jewish refugees on Cyprus are living behind barbed wire waiting for an opportunity to begin life anew in the Jewish homeland; and Europe's 120,000 Jewish children are being cared for through the UJA campaign.

Also involved are Rumania's 350,000 surviving Jews whose plight is deteriorating daily due to a critical food shortage in that country; the more than 750,000 Jews in other parts of Europe who are battling heavy odds to speed their self-reconstruction with help extended through the United Jewish Appeal; the 550,000 Jews of Palestine who need urgent help to continue the settlement and up-building of the Jewish homeland to expand its agricultural and industrial capacity for the absorption of many additional thousands of homeless European Jews.

a stubby 45-caliber pistol cartridge. He fiddled with the cartridge while he talked. An anti-terrorist, he doesn't think rebellion offers the solution to Palestine's problems. But he can't understand Britain's opposition to a Jewish National Homeland.

"Britain is supposed to be afraid that the immigrants from Eastern Europe will turn Palestine into a Communist country if the British move out," he says. "That's just silly — those immigrants left Poland and Russia and eastern Germany because they'd been in contact with communism and had decided they didn't want any. On a percentage basis, the Communist Party of Palestine is the smallest and least effective in the world. Until three months ago, when the Kol-Haam, the 'Voice of the People', began daily rather than weekly publication, Palestine didn't have a daily Communist newspaper. I'm betting the Kol-Haam won't last as a daily — Jews have had too much first-hand contact with communism or with people who've lived under Communist governments to be misled by dreams of ideological Utopias."

Because he values both his freedom and his position as a reporter whom Jews and British alike respect, Agronsky's contacts with the terrorists are as impersonal as he can make them. As a Palestine Jew, he cannot legally talk with a terrorist or receive correspondence from a terrorist without reporting the incident to the British police. As a journalist, he cannot mention the terrorists' radio, "Voice of Fighting Judea," or the posters the terrorists glue to walls and shop windows and telegraph poles almost every night with a special mullage that makes removal impossible except with a razor blade. The restrictions do not pertain to the Middle-East Mail, a British army paper printed in Egypt and flown to Palestine and the only English-language paper other than the Post that is distributed regularly in Palestine. Two or three times a week, Jerusalem news-dealers hawk a Middle-East Mail containing a pronouncement by the terrorists; and a Palestine Post lacking it, from the same news-stand.

Although they have been forced underground, the terrorists have not gone under very far. Without soliciting it, all foreign correspondents start receiving terrorist propaganda within two days of their arrival in Palestine. The neatly printed leaflets and information letters are sent through the British-owned mails, and are sometimes contained in the buff-colored envelopes with "On His Majesty's Service" across the top that are supposed to be used only for official British business. Agronsky doesn't know whether the terrorists steal or forge the envelopes.

Agronsky was repeating a popular Palestine story when his wife, a tall and graceful sixth-generation Palestinian, returned from an interview with Martha Graham. Mrs. Agronsky, a dancer who can't work at her profession in the United States because she is traveling on a tourist's visa, watched her husband as he talked. Although the government denies that wires are tapped in Palestine, a prominent Jewish merchant, according to the story, heard a telltale click whenever he used his phone. He invariably said, "Get off the phone, you CID bastard" to the Criminal Investigation Department official he felt certain was listening in, but the clicks persisted. Whenever his calls were at all political, he received a copy of a transcript of his conversation, annotated with pro-terrorist marginal notes, through the mails the next day. To a Palestine Jew, the story signified that the British were illegally tapping phones and that the terrorists were illegally stealing secret records of the wire-tapping from the British.

"You should not tell stories like that because it is bad enough that it happens," Mrs. Agronsky said to her husband when he had finished. Agronsky tossed the pistol bullet in the air and caught it. Mrs. Agronsky took it from him and dropped it into a wastebasket and stuffed a New York Times on top of it. "In Palestine a friend of ours was sent to the prison for seven years just for having a bullet like that," Mrs. Agronsky said.

one teaspoon vanilla
one teaspoon almond flavouring
one cup shredded coconut
one and one-half cups rolled oats

Cream the butter, add sugar gradually, and cream well together. Add well-beaten egg and flavouring. Then add coconut, rolled oats, and milk. Lastly, add the flour, baking powder, baking soda, and salt, which have been sifted together. Form into small balls, and dip in coconut, or a mixture of coconut and a little brown sugar. Decorate on top with a piece of red cherry or nut, if desired. Put on greased baking sheet, and bake in 375-degree oven, for about ten or twelve minutes.

ROSH HASHONAH MESSAGE

The following New Year message is from the Montreal Board of Jewish Ministers, through Rabbi Charles Bender, leader of Adath Israel Synagogue:

At this solemn season of the year, when the spirit of Yomim Hanukim calls for a sense of introspectiveness and contemplation, the Board of Jewish Ministers of Montreal offers a few suggestions to its fellow-Jews of the community of Montreal, which may help to strengthen and dignify our religious principles and practices.

In choosing a place of worship for the coming holidays, we urge that our fellow-Jews associate themselves with a consecrated synagogue that is dedicated to the purpose of our religion, or in such assembly halls as are part of a synagogue.

We strongly recommend to our fellow-Jews that they utilize this season of spiritual contemplation by a positive identification with a congregation through becoming an affiliated member. Membership of a congregation provides one with a feeling of association with the body of Israel. It strengthens the institution, thereby strengthening the community, and has a direct influence over our lives as individuals.

We greet our fellow Jews and wish them and their families a "k'sivah vahashimim tovah" with the fervent prayer that a brighter year will come to all our people, and peace to all mankind.

Toronto Meetings

• ROUMANIAN HEBREW Congregation, Adath Israel, high holiday services will be held in the synagogue, 557 Bathurst Street. Joseph Donnenfeld is president; others, Louis Caplan, Abraham Schacter.

LEADER SAYS

One reason for the Stern group's opposition to a partition of Palestine, he explained, is that socialism would not be possible in a small Jewish state whose viability was in doubt. The well-known program of his organization is for the establishment of a Jewish state on both sides of the Jordan, that is, including the Arab kingdom of Trans-Jordan.

"We are opposed to partition, and we will fight before the boundaries of a so-called Jewish state are drawn and after that, but when Jewish authority is set up in Palestine, we won't fight against this Jewish authority by means of arms; we will oppose it," Yellin went on. "We are sure that after two or three years there will be a bankruptcy of this authority." The Stern group would oppose a Jewish government in a partitioned Palestine, he explained, because it would be considered treasonable for having given up 80 per cent of "national territory."

LOCKER CHARGES

decisions of the United Nations," the Government is "resolutely determined to combat illegal immigrant traffic by every means at their disposal," the statement said. The British zone of Germany, the announcement said, "is the only territory under British jurisdiction outside Cyprus where such a large number of people can be adequately housed and fed at short notice."

"There are several thousand Jews in Germany today who should by now have been legally admitted to Palestine if they had not been pushed aside by the stream of illegal immigrants," the statement concluded.

Mr. Locker took emphatic issue with this in a letter to the Colonial Office. He asserted that the refusal of the refugees to debark in France was not the result of Zionist threats but represented the "irresistible urge of hundreds of thousands to cease rotting in displaced persons detention camps." Mr. Locker said he had informed a Colonial Office official that the invitation was like "putting a knife at my throat to make me say yes." He added that he had warned the Government that its future actions were at its own "responsibility." He also said he had told the Government that "it is your duty to open the doors of Palestine."

"They know that they can do it, too," he told reporters, "but only stubbornness makes them not do it. Somebody has put the idea into their heads that a Jew is enemy No. 1."

U. N. COMMITTEE

ing, there would be Jewish minorities in Arab land and vice versa. Perhaps the most startling example of this is the inclusion in the Jewish coastal area of all-Arab Jaffa, which has a population of about 95,000 and is Palestine's fourth city in size.

According to U. N. estimates, the Jewish state would have almost as many Arabs as Jews — about 500,000 Jews and 416,000 Arabs. But the Jews would be constitutionally in control. The Arab state would have about 715,000 Arabs and 8,000 Jews. Jerusalem would have 106,000 Arabs and 100,000 Jews.

Though they continued to live in Jerusalem, Jews and Arabs could vote in the elections of their respective states, according to the plan, providing they formally declared intent to become citizens of the states.

While seven countries on the U. N. committee signed the majority report, Australia for some unexplained reason did not sign

NOTICE

The next issue of the Canadian Jewish Review will be the Rosh Hashonah number and all material intended for publication in it must be in the Montreal and Toronto offices not later than Monday, September 8, at one p.m. Personal New Year Greetings received from September 2 to September 17 will be included in the September 19th issue. All news intended for publication in the September 19 issue of the Canadian Jewish Review, must be in our Montreal and Toronto offices not later than Wednesday, September 17; and for the September 26 issue, not later than Tuesday, September 23, at one p.m., on each closing date.

either the majority or minority report.

The minority report, calling for a federalized Palestine, made up of one Arab and one Jewish state, was advanced by India and Iran, whose delegates to the committee both are Moslems, and by Yugoslavia which evidently was carrying out Russia's proposal that partition should not be tried until efforts had failed to make workable a bi-national state in Palestine.

Under this plan, the Jewish and Arab states would enjoy a great deal of local autonomy but the federal government would include a bi-racial legislature in which Jews and Arabs would have equal representation in one house, and proportional representation in the other. The head of state would be elected by a majority of both houses, thus assuring that an Arab always would head the state.

Also, the Arabs would dictate the federal constitution because the minority report provided that it would be drawn by a constituent assembly elected by popular vote. The Arabs' present two-to-one population edge would assure them the control.

Entirely apart from the fact of minority and majority reports, all eleven members of the U. N. committee agreed on a set of principles for guidance of the General Assembly. These included the assertions that the British mandate must be terminated and Palestine be given independence as soon as practicable.

Another principle was the insistence that the constitutions of each separate state include iron-clad guarantees of rights to their minority groups, and that religious freedom and access to religious places must be absolute.

Following this up, for example, the report specified that the holy places of Jerusalem—a city sacred to Jews, Arabs and Christians — shall be guarded by a police force recruited outside Palestine from persons other than Arabs or Jews.

There was one principle which was approved by all delegates except those from Guatemala and Uruguay, the two most pro-Jewish members of the committee.

This principle said: "In appraisal of the Palestine question, it should be accepted as incontrovertible that any solution for Palestine can not be considered as a solution of the Jewish problem in general."

Along the same lines, while the committee was deeply touched by the plight of some 250,000 displaced Jews in Germany and Austria, it refused to recommend specifically that any or all of them be sent to Palestine.

It did say, however, that the General Assembly should immediately undertake an "international arrangement" to settle the European Jewish displaced persons problem both for the sake of the D.P.s and also to relieve pressure on the Palestine problem.

blem both for the sake of the D.P.s and also to relieve pressure on the Palestine problem.

Zionism's only authorized spokesman now in the Holy Land, Mrs. Golda Meyerson, head of the Political Department of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, asked on September 1 that the United Nations General Assembly accept and "improve" its special committee's recommendations for Palestine and that the recommendations be implemented immediately, according to the New York Times.

Emile Ghery, spokesman of the Palestine Arab Higher Committee, denounced the recommendations as an "excess of injustice to Palestine, a flagrant violation of the natural rights of the Arabs in their own country and an echo of the influence of Zionism and world Jewry."

Most Jews in Palestine, having seen so many commissions come and go without effect, were inclined to be skeptical that the proposals of the United Nations' committee would ever be carried out. They were aware that a combination of the British, Soviet and Arab blocs might prevent the two-thirds majority necessary to adopt the recommendations.

Dr. Stephen S. Wise, president of the American Jewish Congress, said in New York that the report of the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine had "furnished the basis" on which a solution of the Palestine problem may be achieved.

Netherlands Israelitish Church Association, governing board for all synagogues in Holland, opposes plan for Jewish colonization of Surinam, insisting that it would never lead to definite solution of Jewish problem.
